Israelis Vow To Exploit New Opening

By William Claiborne JERUSALEM - Senior Israel officials vowed Thursday to exploit the new opening created by Prime Minister Shimon Peres's talks with

"The Arab position is far away from our position, but in order to close the gap we need public dia-logue and, later, public negotiations," said Mr. Peres's media adviser, Un Savir, who traveled with the prime minister to Morocco for the three-day talks. Describing the meetings between the two leaders as a "very signifi-cant historical event," Mr. Savir said the mere fact that a joint communique was issued by the two countries, which technically are in pectations," even though, in his own words, the document was "large and vague on both sides."

No one had any illusions, no on the Moroccan side and certainly not on our side, that within 48 hours it would be possible to bridge the gaps and it would be possible to solve the Middle East conflict," he said. "The importance was in the very readiness of the two sides to publish a joint communiqué, and this in my opinion is certainly a very important sign in itself."

Israeli officials stressed that Hassan's insistence that a comprehensive Middle East peace plan must be based on the proposals adopted by Arab leaders in Fez. Morocco, in 1982, remained unacceptable to Israel. The Fez plan. while implying recognition of Isra-el, calls for Israel's withdrawal from territories occupied in the 1967 war, including East Jerusalem, and negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization. Mr. Peres, on his return Thursday to Tel Aviv, also suggested that the Fez plan could not be a basis zotiations, and said he countered by offering to conduct direct negotiations with Arab states without prior conditions. Mr. Peres said he was not surprised by Hassan's position, and was reminded that when President

Anwar Sadat made his historic visit to Jerusalem in 1977, he presented the same position in a speech to the Knesset Israel's parliament Mr. Peres said elements of the Fez peace plan remained as unac-

Pakistan, in a role that it assumed secretly several years ago but that has since become generally known, is the main pipeline for funneling weapons to the Afghan resistance fighters battling Soviet and Afghan government forces.

Sources here and in Islamabad, the Pakistani capital, say that the new limitations on the missiles are primarily due to Pakistan's own security concerns, including worries over possible Soviet retaliation. It is not clear, the sources said, whether the suspension of the Stinger deliveries is temporary or

BUNE, FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1986 After U.S. Film Deaths, a Real-Life Trial

By Judith Cummings Vew York Times Service

LOS ANGELES — Just a few miles below the hillside "Hollywood" sign that characterizes this city around the world, a trial opened in a Los Angeles courtroom Tuesday that promises some of the splashy drama of a guns-and-action Hollywood film.

Five defendants from the motion picture industry, including the film director John Landis, are facing criminal charges linked to the deaths of the actor Vic Morrow and wo children in the filming of "Twilight Zone: The Movie." The fatal incident took place on July 23, 1982, when the three were hit by a helicopter that was downed amid the firing of explosives in spe-cial effects depicting the bombing of a Vietnamese village.

In the intervening four years, the industry and the authorities have reassessed the safety standards governing filmmakers as they strive for greater and greater realism.

Mr. Landis, whose film credits have included such box-office hits as "The Blues Brothers," "National Lampoon's Animal House" and "Trading Places," is by all accounts the first person to stand trial for a death in connection with a movie that he was directing.
Also on trial are Paul Stewart, the coordinator of special effects in the movie; George Folsey Jr., associate producer; Dan Allingham, production manager, and Dorcey Wingo, a stunt pilot who flew the downed helicopter.

All are charged with involuntary manslaughter, a felony crime, in the deaths of Mr. Morrow, who was 53, and the two children, Myca ie directors.

Dinh Le, 7, and Renee Shinn Chen,

Mr. Landis, Mr. Folsey and Mr. Allingham also are accused of tak-ing the children onto the set after 6:30 P.M. in violation of California laws on child labor. Defense lawyers have called the crash an unforesceable accident. All five defendants have pleaded not guilty. The case has been closely watched by the film industry throughout the public legal examinations leading up to the trial.

In an unusual move, an array of Hollywood directors spoke out in defense of Mr. Landis in a letter in 1984. The group was responding to an article in the magazine Rolling Stone that examined the issue of the extent of responsibility of movJohn Huston, Sidney Lumet, Francis Ford Coppola, George Lucas, Billy Wilder and Fred Zinnemann, should have thought that after 75 contended that directors performed only the artistic function of designing movies and ultimately depended on the "skills and profes-sional responsibility" of others in

An investigation by a Los Angeles County grand jury in June 1983 returned an indictment against the five defendants. A five-week preliminary hearing on the charges was held in 1984.

Municipal Judge Brian Crahan, who decided on the basis of the preliminary hearing that a trial should be held, linked the deaths to the moviemakers' search for cinematic reality.

"All of the principals on the production had one object in mind: the creation of a final illusion which had dynamics, explosives and a feeling of the awesome import of simulated eventual death and hopelessness," Judge Crahan wrote in his decision. "Unfortunately, the attempt to obtain visual truth led to death, without any articulated specific rhyme or reason."

Judge Crahan also noted that the evidence showed that "none of the principals had any intention to harm, let alone kill," Mr. Morrow and the children.

Defense lawyers appealed the ruling to the Superior Court for Los Angeles County. In 1984, Judge Gordon Ringer upheld the ruling and also reinstated charges against Mr. Folsey and Mr. Allingham that Judge Crahan had dismissed.

case are any indication, the battle for the jury's verdict will be hardfought. The panel's selection, which is expected to last a month began Thursday. The chief prosecutor is Lea Purwin D'Agostino, a deputy Los Anseles district attorney who has been nicknamed "the Dragon Lady" by her peers because of a severe elegance in her appearance and what opponents see as a penchant for theatrics in the courtroom. Ms. D'Agostino said the prose-cution would proceed on the theory that Mr. Landis and his co-defendants "engaged in conduct that was grossly negligent, that they placed the children and Vic Morrow in an inherently dangerous situation, and that that is what, in fact, resulted in their deaths? Mr. Landis has brought in one of the nation's most successful defense lawyers, James Neal, a former

The cuts to be proposed by Mr. Obey, a Democrat of Wisconsin, would affect all military and development programs except aid to Is-rael, Egypt, Pakistan and the Irish Republic. Other countries could face cuts of up to 50 percent.

Mr. Obey, who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Foreign Op-crations, said Wednesday that he would propose to the subcommit-tee $129 billion in foreign aid for fiscal 1987, 10.6 percent less than this year's appropriation of $14.5 billion. Mr. Obey also is to propose a $1.3-billion cut in foreign military credit sales, although Egypt, Israel, Pakistan and the Irish Republic again would be excluded. WASHINGTON — Congressmen, scientists and environmental lawyers have commended the Reagan administration's new framework for regulating genetic engi-neering research and the products of biotechnology while asserting that there are weaknesses in the program.

The criticism of the framework, which went into effect last month, came at a hearing Wednesday before three Science and Technology subcommittees in the House.

Overall, the experts and legislators said the package fulfilled most of their objectives and provided scientifically sound and safe procedures for evaluating potential risks from products developed by manipulating the genetic structures of plants, animals and microbes.

But they said there were gaps in the program and that public con-cerns must be addressed concerning the release of genetically engineered microbes into the

Position

Moscow's Reformists

out of Moscow in years has been published by The Guardian of London.

It is a 17-page manifesto allegedly issued by dissatisfied party officials who have formed an opposition group called "Movement for Socialist Renewal," Citing facts and figures normally available only to high-ranking members of the Soviet hierarchy, the anonymous authors assert that the Soviet Union, because of the inherent inefficiency of its political system, has lost out in the competition with the United States.

In the most explosive part of the text, they argue for fundamental political change, including freedom of the press and the creation of "alternative political organizations" - what the West would call political parties.

According to the British newspaper, the ideas contained in the document were first advanced during discussions in think-tanks formed at the instigation of Mikhail Gorbachev. When the party guidelines adopted last October failed to measure up to their expectations, the reformers gathered the suggestions into a single text in the hope that it could be discussed in the Soviet media. When this

The most intriguing document to come did not happen, they made it the platform ut of Moscow in years has been publeaked it to Western newsmen.

The document, by calling for a pluralistic society and announcing the formation of a "movement" that could be regarded as an opposition party, strikes at the root of the Soviet system.

Though asserting that the authors are disappointed reformers who want to go further than Mr. Gorbachev, The Guardian does not exclude the possibility that the document is a provocation. Hard-line opponents of all reform may be seeking to discredit the Soviet leader by linking his reform strategy to a radical program that threatens the monopoly of power of the Communist Party.

In either case the text draws attention both to the limited character of Mr. Gorbachev's reforms and to the dangers the Soviet leader is facing. And it strengthens the impression that he is being challenged from opposite sides — from reformers pushing for more radical changes and from traditionalists who want to stop him in his tracks. The far-reaching policy debate under way in the Soviet hierarchy evidently is far from over.

The Mexican Accord

The Mexican debt agreement is a victory for common sense. It is by no means a final victory, for it represents only one step in the management of Mexico's enormous foreign debt and its return to economic growth. But things are now moving in the right direction, and that is enormously important to the United States. As a matter of foreign policy, Mexico's stability ranks second only to the Soviet strategic relationship in its significance to Americans in coming years. Under this agreement the lenders will make extraordinary concessions to Mexico, and Mexico will make extraordinary efforts in its own behalf. The agreement, signed by Mexico and the International Monetary Fund with the active support of the World Bank and the Reagan administration, does not merely try to help Mexico carry its present debts. Mexico has to be able to carry them in terms that will permit its economy to expand, and that will permit it to continue to borrow. The drop in the price of oil has made Mexico's borrowing requirements imperative. Mexico apparently has abandoned demands for interest rates below market levels, which would threaten higher interest rates to the banks' other borrowers. Beyond that kind of negotiating concession. Mexico is now moving steadily ahead with the most profound kind of internal reforms. It is closing money-losing state-owned enterprises. It is beginning to dismantle the protectionist practices that preserve highly profitable inefficiency for well-connected businessmen. President Miguel de la Madrid and his government are already paying a high political price for these reforms, and Americans should not underestimate the risks Mr. de la Madrid is running.

It is far from certain that the commercial banks will go along and put up their half of the $12 billion in new loans that the agreement would provide over the next 18 months. But the best bet is that, with the usual grumbling, they will cooperate. Otherwise, if there were a Mexican default, they might well be blamed for it. No American bank is likely to expose itself to the consequences of that - not with the U.S. Treasury actively supporting the agreement. If the American banks cooperate, the Japanese and Europeans will follow.

None of that can guarantee success. The present phase of Mexico's distress is wholly owed to one unpredictable event, the sudden collapse of oil prices, and other unpredictable events no doubt lie ahead. But the recent agreement demonstrates that the international system - meaning Mexico, the Reagan administration and the International Monetary Fund - is capable of dealing skillfully with an international economic crisis of the greatest urgency.

-THE WASHINGTON POST.

Other Comment

Reagan's Sanctions Speech

Like Mrs. Thatcher, President Reagan is unswervingly hostile to sanctions, to the point where he sees them as "acts of madness." To justify his attitude, Mr. Reagan has, even more explicitly than in the past, put the South African problem back into the context of East-West confrontation. The void that would be created by a withdrawal of the Western economic presence could only be advantageous, he explained, to the Soviet Union, thus endangering a sea passage of the highest importance.

This line of argument is doubtlessly shared, tacitly, by many European countries and explains their reluctance to treat Pretoria more rigorously. But there is no chance that it will be understood by the leaders of the South African black majority. Even if he could not expect praise, Mr Reagan may be surprised to hear that Bishop Desmond Tutu, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, has called his recent statements "nauseating." This verbal violence expresses the despair of a community that feels abandoned and which is ready to make numerous sacrifices to regain its dignity.

- Le Monde (Paris).

A prudent observer, surveying the hostile reaction to Mr. Reagan's latest address, might this time place a modest bet on his humiliation by Congress. The House has already voted for a comprehensive batch of sanctions; the Republican leaders in the Senate will not go that far, but they most probably will now produce a package that far outdistances anything that the president will welcome. Of course, the president can use his veto if the opportunity is there. But the head of steam on Capitol Hill may deny him the opportunity - and, anyway, he's often been prepared (on everything but Nicaragua) to lose gracefully if the political cost is too high, as long as his rhetoric doesn't suffer. That political cost is mounting fast after Tuesday night's flop. — The Guardian (London).

The Advice of 'Experts'

Africa at any one time plays host to around 40,000 expatriate experts, costing at a conservative estimate about $100,000 a year each. Is their combined advice worth $4 billion a year? Some Africans think not. The distinguished Kenyan journalist Hilary

Ng'weno says that "back in their home countries they would probably not be allowed to tinker with the working of a smallscale firm. let alone an entire nation."

Most field staff will admit that many development projects — maybe most? are poorly conceived, badly planned, ineffectively managed and have little if any useful long-term impact. Perhaps it is time we said so. Too often, we have allowed the need to nurture public sympathy for development assistance to excuse not just a lack of frankness, but downright dishonesty about the effectiveness of aid.

— Jon Tinker, director of Earthscan, writing in World Development Forum.

Of Trial and Disaster

The species that has emerged over millennia has spent the millions of years in an environment that was repeatedly forgiving. It tolerated unspeakable errors, slow mental reactions, feeble intellectual processes. retarded muscular responses. But that species has now made a new world. And the word from Canaveral and Chernobyl is that that world is unforgiving, intolerant of stupidity, awful in reprisal for slow thought, fumbling action and general incompetence

The old world was one of trial and error; the new one is one of trial and disaster. In the old world, an untrained boy could pick up a pair of pliers instead of a monkey wrench to fix an engine and nothing would be lost but a few moments. In the new one, if he picks up a metric spanner instead of an inch one, the delay may cause a continent to disappear in a cloud of radioactive dust. Are we too slow, too sloppy, too undisciplined to survive?

Maybe not, if we can pull up our socks, turn aside from incredible preoccupation with the irrelevant, submit ourselves to new standards of discipline, forgo our incredible appetite for luxury and ease, suppress our sloppy inattention to precise instruction and direction and learn to live by the book. Unless we profoundly alter our intellectual and moral gait; unless we abandon a pace of the mind and a state of morality endurable in a horse and buggy age, our species will one day clumsily commit the Earth to destruction by forces we are not smart enough to control.

Italy. But there the accused were not fantasized juvenile delinquents but real Middle Eastern terrorists. And the judges were not kids making fun of a criminal justice system but real judges, representatives of such a system, who were, without intending it, accomplishing the same end. The trial involved the hijacking of the Achille Lauro. Magid al-Moloi, the on-board leader, received a 30year sentence, less than the life imprisonment the prosecution had de-manded. He had confessed that he had selected Leon Klinghoffer for death, coldly shot him and ordered him thrown overboard.

After the trial, the presiding judge told reporters that Mr. Molqi and two of his three co-defendants had been given reduced sentences because of "attenuating circum-stances." Those circumstances consisted of deprivations they must have suffered because "they have grown up in the tragic conditions that the He tagate contents and many Hestinian people live through."

He apparently accepted the defense argument that Mr. Moloi and his associates were "soldiers fighting for their ideals," not terrorists.

What about Abu Abbas and his upper-echelon co-defendants? They got life imprisonment — a theoretical sentence, since they are on the loose — because they were said to have been "not acting for patriotic mo-tives." But did Mr. Abbas not have the same origins as the man who took over the cruise ship and killed Mr. Klinghoffer? Does he not have the same grievances The main difference seems to be

This scene was recently enacted in nival in the Palestine Liberation Organization. That rival, Yasser Arafat. who has struck such blows many times, and who has not abandoned the tactic, had just then put the tactic on hold while negotiating a deal, later scuttled, with King Hussein.

If anything, Mr. Abbas may be thought to be a greater patriot than Mr. Molqi. He is a general in the struggle and has fought far longer than Mr. Molqi. If he thought Mr. Arafat's strategy prope and hoped Arafat's strategy wrong, and hoped to derail it and then strike a blow for liberty as he saw it does that make him less noble than Mr. Molqi, and his deprivations any less severe? No. Nor, like Mr. Molqi's, should his deprivations be judged morally attenuating, and therefore legally at-tenuating. Both men committed terrorist murder - Mr. Abbas by organizing the plan, Mr. Molqi by pulling the trigger—and both should be seen as terrorists and get the fullest punishment allowed for terrorist murder. To mete out lesser punishment on the ground that a terrorist believes himself to be an aggrieved freedom fighter undermines the ground on which justice stands by accepting terrorists' argument that only their concepts of justice and rights, and their sufferings, are valid.

This murder of justice is not good for the Palestinians either. So long as Mr. Molqi, Mr. Abbas, Mr. Arafat or other PLO members advocate terrorism or practice it while publicly denouncing it, or focus it on civilians who happen to be Israelis or Jews or Americans, they will continue to undermine the possibility that they will ever achieve the justice they define for themselves. The countries targeted by such attacks — especially the United States and Israel — will retaliate, and the war will go on.

For all this to end, two things are necessary. The Palestinians - and any of the many groups using terrorism to satisfy grievances — should scuttle terror and find other ways, inevitably involving compromise, to achieve their goals. And the Western democracies must reject the argument that any excuse - even one involving a background of deprivation — can "attenuate" responsibility for terrorism against innocents.

Who Need An Enemy

PARIS — Somehow, thoughts keep turning to Lebanon as the prime example. It is mostly out of the news these days, partly because it is so dangerous to cover, partly because the Synans are imposing their draconian order on West Beirut again,

The last time the Syrians did so, 11 years ago, they calmed things for a while. But nothing seems to cure Lebanon's raging virus of violence, Peo-ple around the world ought to be learning something from it. The end-less disaster and distress give over-whelming proof of the consequences of supposing the neighborhood can be improved by killing neighbors. Once hatred takes hold, it runs amok; nothing can result but tragefy. These are old verities, but they are constantly challenged by benighted souls who need an enemy in order to think something of themselves. In Hayden Lake, Idaho, a group calling themselves the Aryan Nations World Congress met the weekend before last and called for turning America's Northwest into a whites-only, male-supremacist homeland.

Their leader preaches that Jews are the offspring of Satan through the line of Cain, and urges a "ZOG Inquisition," an attack on the U.S. government, which he calls the "Zionist Occupational Government." The racists weren't many and were greatly outnumbered by participants in a Human Rights Day celebration in nearby Coeur d'Alene. But they showed that the United States cannot be smug about having eradicated the murderous bigot's disease.

In Peru, after the prison massacre that put down mutinous guerrillas, the extreme left movement Sendero Luminoso issued a communique saying: "We foresaw 100 dead. There were 300. But every revolution has its cost. There is nothing to regret. . . . lt was a political triumph for the party. Thanks to this genocide, APRA [the governing party] has removed its democratic, popular mask. Besides, the timing was favorable. It was necessary to prevent APRA's benefiting from the Socialist International congress which was being held in Lima."

The guerrilla leaders deliberately sought to sacrifice their imprisoned comrades to increase the militarization of the country and to fanaticize

the people. The army obliged.
In Johannesburg, Seth Mazibuko, the leader of the United Democratic Front in Soweto, condemned the brutal deaths by "necklacing" and the behavior of youths trying to enforce a rent boycott by threatening elderly residents with burning if they pay, Mr. Mazibuko, now in hiding, said; post of army chief, and replaced him We've not to stop this or else there with General Chaovalit Yong-chaiyuth, a trusted former aide. LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Tax Reform: A Warning

Americans abroad are about to participate in a momentous change in the U.S. income tax law - the most sweeping since 1954. As both the House and Senate versions of the proposed new law are in reasonable accord, it is likely that the final version will be passed by Congress before its summer recess.

Americans living abroad will be directly affected by the proposed changes to earned income exclusion, which will be reduced under both versions of the new law. The legislative knife will cut deeper if the House has its way by subjecting an overseas American who claims the earned income exclusion to the alternative minimum tax, which may make him taxable both in his country of residence and his country of citizenship. Not just high-bracket taxpayers will suffer, but potentially medium-income salaried people as well.

It is no secret that the approximately three million expatriate Americans are perennial victims of the crosscurrents that continually disturb the fiscal sea As we are scattered around the world, we are not represented in Congress as a unitary body (i.e., as if we were a 51st state), and thus are without real representation as a single interest group. Worse, we continue to suffer the stigma of the cop-out, the runaway, the seekers of the easy life outside the main arena of continental America, where it's really at.

We at the Association of Americans Resident Overseas (AARO) have long fought to impress upon the Congress the vital role of Americans abroad: economically, by working to stabilize the balance of payments; socially, by allowing our overseas friends to glimpse and understand the often startling stuff of which we are made: and culturally, by helping to bring abroad the funnier, lighter and more energetic side of our national character. We are not heroes, but neither are we pariahs.

Given the current tax reform climate, all we ask is that the earned income exclusion be allowed to remain as is. AARO urges all Americans abroad to write at once to Senator Bob Packwood, in care of the U.S. Senate, and/or to Representative Dan Rostenkowski, in care of the House of Representatives, to express their concerns and to request that, at the worst, the Senate version of Section 911 and the alternative minimum tax be adopted. SAMUEL H. OKOSHKEN. AARO, Paris.

An Arsenal for the U.S. War on Drugs

N EW YORK — What can be done to counter the burgeoning drug abuse that America faces? Certainly, state and local governments must continue to use their full resources against drug conditions. But drugs are a national problem, and narcotics control must be primarily a federal responsibility. I propose the following steps as a coordinated response to the problem: Use the full resources of the military for drug interdiction. The Posse Comitatus doctrine, dating from the Reconstruction era and which restricts participation of the military in civiln law enforcement, must be modified so that the military can be used for narcotics control. I applaud the Reagan administration's military assistance given to Bolivia to strike the drug problem at the source. But it is only a beginning. Congress must insist that the 500 coast guard narcotics By Edward I. Koch

Condition foreign aid on drug con-trol. On April 8, President Reagan issued a National Security Decision Directive recognizing international drug trafficking as a national security threat and making drug control programs by foreign governments a "consideration" in the awarding of foreign aid. That is not enough. We must send an unmistakable message to those countries that export narcotics to the United States: Continue to do so and lose financial aid.

Establish a drug education corps. 1 suggest creating a National Drug Education Corps, modeled on the sist that the 500 coast guard narcotics crimes. Given the scope of the national drug problem, that number is unacceptably low. Federal prosecu-tion of drug dealers of all levels must be dramatically expanded. Separate U.S. narcotics courts must be established to process these cases in full partnership with the state courts. Designate U.S. narcotics prisons. The Bureau of Prisons should designate separate facilities for drug offenders. Segregating such prisoners, preferably in remote locations such as desert areas, might motivate drug offenders to abandon their trade. Pass a money-laundering statute.

Despite federal estimates that illegal drug trade generates $50 billion to $75 billion a year in the United States, there is no federal moneylaundering statute. Congress should bar money transactions by those intending to promote or profit from unlawful drug trafficking.

Enhance the federal agencies combating the drug problem. The attorney general should greatly increase the number of drug enforcement agents in New York and other cities. He should direct the Federal Bureau of Investigation to devote substantial manpower against the cocaine trade and should see to it that the Immigration and Naturalization Service is capable of detecting and deporting aliens convicted of drug crimes in far greater numbers than it now does.

Enact the state and local narcotics control assistance act of 1986. This bill provides $750 million annually for five years to assist state and local jurisdictions to increase their capacities for enforcement, corrections. education and prosecution.

These proposals offer no certainty for success. But to win the fight against drugs, it is essential that the federal government be persuaded to recognize its leading responsibility. The New York Times.

Israelis gathered for the first public glimpse of the country's advanced jet, the Lavi.

Israel is to fighter aircraft what Jack Nicklaus is to golf balls. France sold 1,200 Mirages after Israel used them to devastating effect in the 1967 war

If the Lavi does fly, and delivers even half of what it promises, say Israeli officials, it will at minimum represent several billion dollars in lost sales for American aircraft companies — particularly General unics, which supplies Israel with F-16's, or Northrop, which has been trying, unsuccessfully, to sell Israel its F-20. At worst, the Lavi would become a competitor in world markets.

To counter the American aerospace lobby and the Pentagon cost analysts, Israel Aircraft Industries. the state-owned manufacturer of the Lavi, recently opened discussions with McDonnell Douglas and the Grumman Aerospace Corporation to see whether they would like to be partners in the plane. Grumman, already making the wings for the Lavi, is said to be considering age contained trash. The police official said the man drove off toward Rome and a police motorcycle patrol gave chase, catching up with him about 12 miles from Castel Gandolfo. The official said the man got out of the car shouting and waving a hatchet at the officers, who shot him. The man had been undergoing psychi-atric treatment, the official said. The Italian news agency ANSA dentified the man as Roberto Por-

British Panel Faults Aides Up in West Berlin

In News Leak The Associated Press LONDON - A parliamentary committee said Thursday that government officials had acted improperly in authorizing a damaging news leak last January during a dispute over Britain's only helicopter maker. The leak led to the resignation of two cabinet ministers. The Select Committee on Defense said there was no evidence Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher knew of the leak, which came during a battle over whether U.S. or European aircraft makers should gain control of the nearly bankrupt elicopter maker. Westland PLC The committee called the leak. which was authorized by Leon Brittan, secretary of trade and industry, "an improper act." Mr. Brittan resigned and so did Michael Heseltine, the secretary of defense whom Mr. Brittan sought to discredit with the leak.

The leak to the Press Association of a confidential letter from the solicitor general, Sir Patrick Mayhew, undermined Mr. Heseltine at the height of his battle against Mr. Brittan and Mrs. Thatcher over the future of Westland.

In February, Westland's share-holders voted in favor of accepting a takeover bid led by a U.S. company, Sikorsky, in partnership with Fiat of Italy, in effect rejecting a bid by a consortium of British and European companies promoted by Mr. Heseltine.

Sir Patrick wrote that Mr. Heseltine had given inaccurate information in a letter about a U.S.-led rescue bid for Westland. When Mr. Heseltine resigned three days later. he asserted that the leaking of the letter had been part of an attempt to discredit him and stifle his cam-

Police Shoot Man At Papal Palace

The Associated Press ROME — The police shot and killed a man who threw a package in front of the pope's summer residence Thursday and then threatened pursuing officers with a hatchet, a police official reported. at policemen guarding the papal palace in Castel Gandolfo that this present is for you and the pope," according to an official of the Italian highway police. The police later determined that the pack-

Eastern Shoplifting

BERLIN --- East German travel restrictions on visitors to West Germany are now easier for young people as well as pen-sioners. But currency restrictions remain strict, with visitors on one-day trips allowed to take only eight Deutschmarks ($4) across the border. So crossings are increasing but so is shoplifting, officials in the western sector of Berlin say. The variety of consumer goods on display proves tempting even for prominent East Germans. Herbert Meissner, an East German economist suspected of spying on West Germany, was allowed to return home this week after being ar-rested in West Berlin for allegedly shoplifting a $14 shower

Minor theft brings a warning or, at most, a fine. Only when shoplifters are caught more than once or when they try to steal expensive articles does the West Berlin district attorney transmit criminal records to the East German authorities. This happens about eight times a month, officials say, and about a fifth of last year's 21,500 shoplifters in West Berlin were East Germans

A Historic Coalition For Old San Marino

SAN MARINO - Christian Democrats and Communists will govern side by side for the first time in the history of the world's smallest and oldest republic, A six-week cabinet crisis ended last week with the two parties agreeing to form a coalition government eral Socialists.

Parliamentary approval for a 24-square-mile (62-square-kilometer) city-state in the Apenmand a 70 percent majority.

BRUSSELS - In 1985, 56 percent of the 250 million adults in the European Community went away for their vacations. An EC survey said the Dutch headed the chart with 65 percent of the population leaving home, but Luxembourg topped the list of those going LONDON - More and more British couples are living together instead of getting married, and almost one in five children born in England and Wales last year was illegitimate, according to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Just over 19 percent were born to unmarried parents last year compared with fewer than 12 percent in 1980. The Family Policies Studies Center says more illegitimate children are born in the United Kingdom than in most European countries: 15.4 percent in 1983, compared with 5.2 percent in Belgium, 7 percent in the Netherlands, 4.8 percent in Italy and 14.2 percent in France. ROME - in an effort to curb the nearly 2,000 annual road deaths from head injuries, a new law went into effect last week making crash helmets compulsory for the 2 million Italian motorcyclists and motor scooler drivers and passengers. LONDON — Travel agents say that despite the threat of terrorism, recent airline bookings indicate that travel to Enrope in 1986 should be down no more than 10 percent from last year, when 6.8 million people flew to Europe. Moreover, the lost traffic consists of canceled group tours, rather than freerspending individuals. The New York Times reports.

MILAN - Daniele Masella, a Milanese businessman, says he is by now resigned to the fact that the telephone company gave him a phone number in 1983 which, until then, had been the private number of Bettino Craxi, currently the caretaker prime minister. "Callers never believe me when I say I ant not Craxi," he says, adding that he now gives press releases to insistent journalists, and sometimes tells deferential callers "you can call me Bettino." Mr. Masella says he never requested a different number because it took him more than five months to get the present one.

A Soviet 'Rambo' Mows Down the U.S. Bad Guys

By Philip Taubman

New York Times Service MOSCOW - The newest hero in the Soviet Union is a tough but compassionate commando officer who leads his men into combat against evil Americans in the sum-end by a rifle shot in the back that brings gasps from the audience.

Muscovites have nicknamed him "Rambo," for the character played by Sylvester Stallone who, in one film, kills dozens of Russians while rescuing Americans held prisoner in Southeast Asia.

The Soviet authorities have complained about the anti-Soviet tone of Mr. Stallone's movies and other American films. One official said such films were creating heroes who kill "Reds and Russians not for money, but with a kind of per-verse relish."

Austria's railways have always provided comfort and convenient this year they offer some extra advantages to touries. The trains run on frequent schedules, save hours of driving time, and even come equipped with phone service. In addition to the regularly scheduled steam locomotive service, museum trains run frequently, and special trips are available. It is even possible to rent a train by the hour. The special trips available on rail include: The Montalon Valley Railway which offers two round trips on a vintage steam train every Thursday afternoon until September 11; the Achensee Railway, a meter-gauge steam rack system, which climbs 1,370 feet to its destination, a breathtaking mountain lake; the Zillertal Railway, which gives the passenger the opportunity to be the engineer on a five-mile stretch of the line. The Murtal Railway runs vintage steam trains, and can be chartered for special trips, and the Gleichenberger Railway, a 14-mile pecial trips, and the Gleichenberger Railway, a 14-mile tablerd-gauge electric rail, is available for occasional mu-

There are those who dream of castles in Spain; now tonists can view a different type of castle in Catalan, a human one known as "colles de castellers." By acrobatic tradition that originated in the Middle Ages the castles are to stand by men grasping each others' shoulders to form a base, while others climb these human pillars to form the next level. Some of the "colles de castellers" reach as high as seven feet, using as many as 150 men. The human towers are formed in cities and villages to celebrate the te major, or grand festival, on the day of the community's patron saint. Other events in calibration of the saint's day include a carnival, parade regional folk dancing, including La Sardana, the total Catalonian folk dance. The festival ends at sunset with a procession and a fireworks display. Human cas-des can be seen at the festa major de San Felix and the fes-tival in honor of Raimundo de Penafort, both in Vilaranca del Penedes, as well as in many other towns.

Crockett's cane

Through paintings, writings and such memorabilia as a rifle, a gold watch and a snuff box, Davy Crockett is being remembered in a new exhibit at the Smithsonian Institution's National Portrait Galkey. The exhibition, titled "Davy Crockett: Gentleman From the Cane," commemorates both the 200th anniversary of his birth on Ang. 17, 1786, and the sesquicentennial of his death at the Alamo.

in March 1836. In 1822, David Crockett - he never called himself Davy - was dubbed "gentleman from the cane" (actually, sugar cane fields) by a fellow lawmaker in the Tennessoc Legislature seeking to emphasise Crock-- ett's humble origins. Crockett, who was a frontiersman, stout, storyteller, campaigner and politician, turned the insalt into a compliment, embracing it as a symbol of his rugged honesty and unpretentious ways. The Smithsonian show, running through Sept. 14, will feature paintings of Crockett and many of his contemporaries (Henry Clay, Daniel Webster and Andrew Jackson, among others). The show also includes mementos of Crockett the fictional hero. Among these is a portrait of Frank Mayo, the actor who portrayed Crockett on stage more than 1,000 times

Bali: irresistible smiles and stone temples.

EGIAN, Bali — The first time I stepped off a plane in Bali a blast of hot air embraced me with a strange sensation of familiarity. It was as if I was not only returning, but that I had never left.
I was in fact there as part of a University of Hawaii study group; it was 1978 and people had long been lamenting the de-mise of the island's fabled culture. Yet I found little to lament. The wiry, coppercolored young man who had been dispatched to meet at Ngurah Rai airport us oaded our luggage into the trunk of a 1963 Dodge Polara. On its dashboard was a palm leaf heaped with flowers and other tidbits to placate the god in charge of the island's highways. It would be suicidal to venture into Bali's treacherous traffic

Thus we drove into the paramount paradise of Indonesia's myriad paradises, past kelly-green padi (rice) fields and enchant-ing temple and residential compounds, over bridges guarded by sculpted stone gods and rivers running with children and women scrubbing clothes. Along the roadsides, men squatted in sarongs and caressed brawny fighting cocks. Young women with irresistible smiles sat in shacks selling cigarettes, bags of peannts, bottles of pastel-colored liquids and packets of Rinso. We turned on a dusty lane and drove into the village of Ubud, up to the impressive, moss-encrusted walls of the palace of Puri Saren, an ancient establishment that has hosted such luminaries as Charlie Chaplin, Marlon Brando, Ho Chi Minh, the king and queen of the Netherlands and Robert F. Kennedy. We stopped in front of a gate, a stone monolith about 30 feet tall, topped by a series of roofs, each smaller than the one below. Two statues of club-toting creatures with grisly faces guarded the gate. The menacing figures were black-andwhite checked sarongs. Did the Balinese believe these stone gods lived and

We walked past the statues into a court-yard surrounded by more walls. Beyond was another courtyard and the bungalows that were to be our quarters for the week. The decor in the bungalows could only be described as early grass but. There were no modern amenities. Mosquito nets hung over simple but comfortable beds. Kerosene lamps, primed for darkness, stood on tables. Water was delivered each morning by a young man who fetched it from a nearby well and poured it into a square tiled basin through a hole in the bathroom wall. We bathed like the Balinese — by holding our breaths and dumping scoops of cold water over our heads. That evening our hosts, the village royalty, welcomed us with a spectacular kecak monkey dance in which men's barking voices are the background music for folk-lore skits. Afterwards, we slept in traditional style - jarred in and out of dreams and nightmares by the echoing, stentonian tuck-koo, tuck-koo, tuck-koo tuck-koo of tokay lizards, waking to crowing cocks. It was a grand introduction to Bali, one that has brought me back dozens of times. I never have really left the island since that first

Bali is the best known of Indonesia's islands, romanticized in travelogue, fiction and film. There are bits and pieces of it in James Michener's imaginary Bali Hai. Its art has been compared to the work of Aubrey Beardsley and Hieronymus Bosch. Its festivals and music have inspired contemporary pop stars like David Bowie and Jon Anderson. Bali goes its own peculiar way, a land that has not struggled for existence," wrote the American journalist Hickman Powell during a visit in the

The island's 5,623 square kilometers (2,140 square miles) are compact — half the area of Jamaica — but encompass idvilic vistas. It is doubtful any of the world's islands boasts a view like the one from the ridge in the village of Sayan, of emerald rice-field terraces, a silver river that foams as it tumbles over boulders at the bottom of a profound ravine, and the sapphire silhouettes of a distant volcano range. It is sublime, especially in the morning and evening, when flocks of herons float through the gorge in the orchid sunrise and crimson sunset.

Friends of mine, an American family that had lived in Jakarta for 10 years, built a Balinese-style bungalow on that ridge. On Christmas Day 1983, I attended their house-warming party. A heavy rain that had just ended had glazed the palm leaves, and drops caught in the grass sparkled in the sun. The people of Sayan, delighted that foreigners had been bewitched into settling in their village, served us a delicious banquet of suckling pig, rice and fruit. We ate with our hands from biodegradable plates of banana leaf. Young girls danced for us. We celebrated the dawn of a new dwelling as night coursed into the gorge

Bali is at its best at times of transition. When rice planting begins and harvest ends, the villages swirl with feasting and dancing and the hypnotic rhythms of the gamelan orchestras, the sound of which a light and flowing water."

When human life begins, an infant is carried everywhere until its first birthday to spare him the shame of crawling like an animal. When children become young adults, their teeth are filed with great fanfare to reduce the evils of human nature (greed, anger, jealousy, etc.) and decrease the chance of human error and frailty. And when life ends, crowds of sarong-clad men hoist on their shoulders palm-tree-tail funerary towers festooned with the garish, bug-eyed creatures of Balinese myth and nightmares, and send the spirit of the deceased to the afterlife on a pyre. Religion governs every phase of life in Bali.

HESE transitions are not in the least bit subtle. For instance, at the end of a year and the beginning of a new one by Bali's hmar calendar, on a day called Nyepi, beaches and temples and streets empty out and an eerie, uncharac-teristic stillness descends on the island as people stay home and refrain from lighting fires and from working, in an effort to trick mischief-making evil spirits into abandoning the island by making them believe it is devoid of life. Even tourists are not exempt from the rituals. On Nyepi, hotels advise guests to stay on the grounds lest they be chased from the beach by religious police.

found in most any village, most visitors put up, at least initially, in one of the three iourist enclaves at the southeastern tip of the island: Sanur, Kuta Beach or the lavish new government-built Nusa Dua tourist-/convention resort complex.

Sanur is an upmarket area popular with older couples and families. It premier lodging is the Tanjung Sari, a cozy collec-tion of bungalows set in gardens. Each bungalow is different. Prices range from about 112,000 rupiah ($100) to 224,000 rupiah a night. The Bali Hyatt has more conventional rooms for about 112,000 ruat the Kul Kul restaurant. The menu at Swastika Gardens is popular and inexpen-

Knta Beach, with its designer boutiques, discos, "party nights" and inexpensive bungalows and pensions, attracts younger crowds and has become a glamorous St. Tropez of Southeast Asia in recent years. The beach is long and golden, full of peddlars hawking cheap jewelry, carvings, even massages-while-you-sunbathe. Chez Gado-gado (Gado-gado is a traditonal salad with peanut sauce) attracts the fashionable to its superb oceanfront setting on disco nights. The Blue Ocean brings in many jetsetters for its "full moon" parties. Comfortable rooms with bathrooms can be found in Kuta for as little as 5,600 rupiah, and enormous lobsters go for as little as 9,000 rupiah at some restaurants. Knta's best food and company is at Made's Warung, an inconspicuous-looking, open-front establishment near Kuta's main intersection.

Nusa Dua, southeast of the airport, has conventional hotel rooms and opulent Balinese-style architecture. There is a huge pool at the grand Hotel Nusa Dua, where rooms run about 72.800 runiah and un. The smaller, beachfront Hotel Bualu is a water-sports resort where the rates (50,400 rupiah to 95,200 rupiah) include sailing, scuba diving, snorkeling and wind-surfing. Most of Bali's three million people live just far enough removed from the tourist hubs in southeastern Bali, in close-knit villages on the south-central slopes of the island, an area dominated by the island's island, an area dominated by the island stallest mountain. Mount Agung (3,142 meters; 10,290 feet) is the home of Ball's supreme god, Sanghyang Widi, in his manifestations as Brahma, Vishnu and Siva.

Besakih, the mother of Bali's teeming family of temples, rises in a series of ter-races that resemble a sculpted stone rice field in the shadow of Agung's summit. Composed of nearly 200 interrelated structures scattered around the mounin's slopes. Besakih contain a litany in stone composed over the centuries by a succession of priests and rulers.

Less important in the temple hierarchy, but equally breathtaking, is Tanah Lot, west of the noisy, dusty island capital, Denpasar. Built on a outcropping licked by breakers off a promontory on the southwest shore, it can be reached only at low tide. Temple processions through the surf have long inspired artists and photographers.

Bali's temples are the inspiration and setting for fabled festivals that bring their somber gray stones to life with color and movement. Women in the form-litting sarong kebaya balance stacks of plates and bowls filled with fruit, flowers and rice cakes on their heads and parade on dikes and paths. Men with scarves twisted around their heads carry gamelan instruments; other prance in the costumes of the good Barong, a bizarre hybrid creature and its archenemy, the witch Rangda, a fanged, striped vampire. Temples are sometimes the backdrop for morality plays that pit the forces of good against evil in dance dramas that rapidly build in intensity until some of the actors go into trances. With glazed eyes, they try to impale themselves on the points of their kris daggers. Inexplicably, the blades rarely penetrate their skin, an enigma the Bali and grand. Their favorite Paris church was the Madeleine, which was greatly admired because it looked more like a bank than a place of popish worship and because it was relatively new. "The most magnificent edifice I have seen in the old world," was how one Willard Parker described the Madeleine. "Impossible to find anything more beautiful."

The center for amusement was the Palais Royal. Except for the students' quarter, the Left Bank was little visited; the Arc de Triomphe Along with the Louvre, the most popular attraction was Père Lachaise cemetery. Used to modest churchyards, the Americans were fascinated by the magnificence of Père Lachaise and by the idea of having a burial ground unconnected to a church. It showed a different view of life and death, they concluded. "A Frenchman buries his wife, builds her tomb and reserves a space for himself beside her," one tourist wrote. "After which he enjoys life with good food and drink. He has his tomb at Pere Lachaise just as he has his box at the opera."

"Each nation," said an Episcopalian clergyman from Connecticut named Nathaniel Wheaton, "has its peculiarities. But in their attempt to make the home of the dead more agreeable than restful, the French have shown a degree of sensitivity and delicacy that one would find in no other

In those pre-Haussmann days, many tourists found Paris already beautifully laid out. They were all struck by the vivacity of street life — peddlers, tarts, food vendors, honest and dishonest folk mixed into a colorful crowd that communicated its excitement to the tourists. Or to most tourists: Some killjoys found Parisian frivolity immoral. While a Mrs. Kirkland thought London much more substantial than Paris, most of the American tourists preferred Paris despite its numerous and delightful moral defects.

Like today, waiters had sudden attacks of deafness and the displays of fruits and vegetables in outdoor markets were tempting and luscious. If many modern tourist haunts did not yet exist, there were other distractions now happily vanished; visits to the debtors' prison on the Rue de Clichy, bear fights, public executions by guillotine. Among more conventional pleasures, the theater of the time was especially rich. In 1834, 128 plays by 140 playwrights were produced in Paris. Since there were only 23 theaters, often two or three plays a day would be presented, one after the other.

The great actors of the period — Talma, Lemaitre, Mile, Mars, Rachel are still remembered in French theater history. Each star had his or her clique with a leader that behaved like an orchestra conductor, telling his

by Roger Collis

ICHARD Noble, the fastest man on Earth (he holds the world landspeed record of 633,468 miles an hour), is hoping to achieve a new record of sorts in the air with his latest brainchild, a light aircraft — the ARV Super 2. It has a top speed of around 100 mph and he claims it will almost halve the cost of flying a small single-engine plane.

The Super 2 made its formal debut at Heathrow on July 21 when the chairman of Britain's Civil Aviation Authority handed over the certificate of airworthiness. It was the first time in 40 years that both a new British-designed airframe and aero-engine had been certified for this type of plane.

At around $39,000 it costs no more than a mid-range Porsche. A comparable plane, the Cessna 172, costs around $70,000. It costs about $33 an hour to run, compared with about $50 for a Cessna, has superior performance, can take off and land on a 427-foot (130-meter) grass strip and by all accounts is a peach to fly.

The trouble with private flying has been that few people can afford it. You should learn in your 20s when your reactions are sharp, but most people have to wait until they're at least 30 before they have enough disposable income," Noble says. "By the time you're 40, it's almost too late to learn in the full sense, like having an instrument rating. And if you don't fly regularly you feel unsafe, which is why many people drop out."

Noble learned to fly as part of his training for the land-speed record. His sponsors, who had put $3 million into the car, which was powered by a 35,000-horsepower Rolls-Royce jet engine, would not let him race otherwise."The requirements are fairly similar to of a test pilot, you've got to be able to read instruments quickly and think your way logically out of a problem," Noble says. "So we decided on a mix of instrument flying and aerobatics. I got hooked on flying — I really love it — but I realized I couldn't afford it in real life. Flying was becoming more and more expensive and elitist."

One reason for this is that the U.S. manufacturers, notably Cessna and Piper, which have dominated the light aircraft market since the end of World War II, have not been updating their technology, which is at least 20 years old. The United States produced a huge number of two-seat, single-engined planes for recreation and training (43,000 were sold between 1950 and 1985, 70 percent in the United States). But according to an industry source, "they delivered 17,000 new planes in 1978; this year we can expect maybe 1,700." To blame is the recession, decisions to move to corporate and business planes and the prohibitive cost of product liability insurance in the Great Land of Liti-

"We formed a company [ARV Aviation] one month after the land-speed record with no money at all," Noble says. "Three months later, we had a team and the concept of the 10,000 planes." Noble raised the money usually takes a co-pilot with him."

from merchant banks and private investors. The Super 2 is in production, and Noble claims to have orders worth around $1.5 million, many to flying schools.

Operating your own plane can also involve entrepreneurial skills. For example, do you buy a plane new or secondhand? (Unlike cars, planes go on virtually for ever, as bits wear out you replace them.) It is important to pick the right plane for your particular use. Unless you're planning to fly more than 100 hours a year, you may be better off renting a plane at your local flying club. But this depends on whether you want to fly for business or pleasure or both. Interest on capital, depreciation, operating costs and the tax angle are factors to consider. If your accountant can justify part of your flying for business, your private flying may not cost you very much.

But at the end of the day, the cost of flying is worth whatever you say it is; how you value your time and the convenience of being able to land at any one of 2,000 airports in Europe. To fly a plane like the Super 2 you will need a basic pilot's license for visual flying in a single-engine plane outside cloud and controlled air space. This is likely to take you about 40 hours, which at $120 an hour. with an instructor, will cost around $5,000. Many recreational fliers stop here.

Single-engine planes make most sense for recreation, although some people use them for business as well. But if you plan to fly regularly on business or pleasure outside your own country, it is best to consider a twin-engine plane with all-weather naviga tion and de-icing eminment hristopher Orlebar, a British Airways Concorde pilot who owns a half share in a single-engine Piper Cherokee, says: "Let's face it, planes are very reliable. But you've still got that one engine. It's not very comfortable to be in a cloud on one engine. If you break out of the bottom, you probably haven't got time to pick yourself a good landing spot in an

Dr. Michael Joy, a London cardiologist relies on more than a wing and a prayer when he takes his twin-engine Beechcraft Baron on trips to the Continent. Joy has a full instrument rating and his plane is equipped with sophisticated all-weather equipment. Nevertheless, he prefers to take a co-pilot to share the workload - steering around storms and dealing with clearances. Joy reckons the plane, which he bought secondhand for $45,000 — a new plane is about $300,000 -- costs about $15,000 a year in fixed costs and $82 an hour to fly.

One way to make money out of your plane is to buy a corporate jet, such as a Cessna Citation. IDS Aviation, based at Heathrow, manages and charters planes for owners. The managing director, Ian Sutherland, says: "Citations go out at £940 an hour. The owner gets about 400 hours of charter a year, which earns him about £350,000. After he's paid operating costs, maintenance and our management fee, he nets about £30,000-40,000 and is flying virtually for free. We have one owner who flies himself, but he

A turquoise lake was tacked onto the valley floor below. Beyond loomed a snow-capped range of dark, bruised peaks. We were in the Xizang autonomous region (Ti-bet), no longer forbidden but still forbid-

Once this Himalayan fastness was so unattainable that it must have been the most talked of and least visited place in the world. For centuries its tundra plateaus and shark's teeth mountain ranges, that sprawl over an area almost the size of Western Europe, were off limits to outsiders. The Buddhist monks who ran the country believed that Western attitudes would undermine the medieval structure of the social and political hierarchy and prompt a questioning of the theocratic rule of the Dalai Lama.

Since 1980 an increasing number of mountaineering groups have been allowed to visit Xizang to tackle some of the 60 peaks strung along the chain of mountains that straddle the 800-mile border with Nepal Our party consisted of 14 people, varying in age from 22 to 68, and a larding of guides from England, the Chinese Mountaineering Association and Xizang itself. Our destination was Mount Everest, where we intended to camp at the foot of the North Face.

None of us were mountaineers, and only a few of us were accustomed to trekking. But we had all been required to furnish a doctor's certificate of good health before being in-cluded on the four-week odyssey.

In terms of creature comforts, the reward for the heavy financial outlay was nil. The Tibetan countryside is not geared for tourism. En route to Everest we were housed in spartan military barracks first at Xigaze, the home of the Panchen Lama, and then in the 17th century fortress town of Shekar. Water flowed cold from a handpump in the courtrow of holes in the ground.

Under Everest

While visitors may think they have found the travellers' ultimate holy grail, the political reality is that they are in the Xizang Autonomous Region of the People's Republic of China. After the Chinese invasion, the Dalai Lama, a living buddha, and the country's spiritual and temporal leader, went into exile in India in 1959.

During the Cultural Revolution, monasteries were closed and all but three of the 3,800 holy sites were destroyed. Over the past six years Buddhism has been allowed a minor resurgence. In Lhasa, pilgrims flock in the hundreds to prostrate themselves on the polished flagstones and kiss the jewel-encrusted images in the candlelit shrines of the Jokhang, a four-story, golden-roofed temple that is a focal point for Xizang's bedrock

Nearby is the Potala, a fairy-tale palace that used to be the seat of the country's theocratic government and the home of the Dalai Lama. Monks will show you to his four-room eyrie atop the 13-storey building. As we shuffled past banks of Buddhas lit by flickering yak butter candles, the monks whispered with tears in their eyes, "Tell the Dalai Lama we pray daily for his return."

To the south of Lhasa, the only area open to foreign travellers, life takes on the appearance of a medieval tapestry.

But the women are a giggling sunburst of color, in brightly striped aprons with turquoise-studded hair that cascades below their waist. They file through the valleys against the backdrop of Everest, at 29,028 feet, the world's highest point. On this leg of the trip, altitude sickness had to be watched carefully. While Lhasa stands at 12,000 feet, the valleys that thread their way along the ranges are a dizzying 15,000 feet. Acclimatization takes about two weeks; until then there is a tendency to feel lightheaded, which is aggravated if you overexert yourself. Diamox, which can be obtained on prescription, is highly recommended to keep altitude sick-

Our base camp on Everest, near a deserted monastery once inhabited by 20 lamas, was a mere 16,500 feet and prefaced the Rongbuk glacier. The party pitched two-man tents and slept in sleeping bags on thin mattresses.

The first reconnaissance on Evene north face was made in 1921 by the English man, George Leigh Mallory. He saw the imprint of what appeared to be a bare inman foot in the snow at 20,000 feet. The Tibetans said it belonged to Melohkagmi the abominable snowman. An exception able climber who was to lose his life in 1924 on a summit bid for Everest, Mallory tackled his ascents in a relaxed manner. He won shirts and sweaters to keep out the cold While bivouacking on miniscule ice ledges, he read "Hamlet" and "King Lear" to pass the time. Supplies included soup, biscuit jam and chocolate but also qualis, truffle and crystallized ginger.

More than 60 years later we at herring out of cans with our fingers, squatting on upturned food boxes in the mess tent. Westheld a party when a departing expedition of a climbers bequeathed us a blackened hausehold

In the mornings we struggled to extrictle toothbrushes from the blocks of ice in our mugs and for the most part simply languished in our tents like beached whales.

But the few of us who attempted the strenuous walks up the moraine, a debris described rocks and stones deposited by the glacier, to about 19,000 feet, were rewarded with the unparalleled experience of being almost as top of the world. Only two of the party tackled the higher slopes where mou eeting expertise is needed.

Escape London Tourist Traps

by Denis Herbstein

ONDON — For too many visitors, the well-worn path of Tourist London leads from the Tower to Madame Tussaud's to Kew Gardens to the National Gallery to Harrods to a West End theater to a medieval banquet, rounded off with a slide through the fake eroticism of Soho—all accompanied by long lines, expensive ice cream, testy kids and the feeling that there must be more to London than this. There surely is, for those willing to wander off the beaten track. Here follows an idiosyncratic, and far from exhaustive list of places

This is the most backward area of Yugoslavia, and the most exotic. Pristina, the capital of Kosovo, is rapidly expanding into a mod-em city. But towns like Prizzen and Pec, close to the Albanian border, retain a distinctly Oriental air and appearance bearing witness to 500 years of Turkish occupation. Much as it was scores, if not centuries, ago, almost as if preserved in a hving time cap-

Many people, especially the women, still wear traditional folk costumes as a matter of course and the sight can be dazzling. New and used folk wear are offered for sale both in the market-place and in the tiny shops and workshops that line the streets. There are handloomed linen shirts and dresses, silk and velvet jackets and vests trimmed with gold and silver braid, sashes and aprons in intricate multicolored patterns, domelike white felt Albanian caps, shimmering scarves and festival gowns.

Pec, an ancient town of twisting streets crossed by rivulets and lined by crumbling Turkish and medieval buildings, is famous for its carpet market. Here, in an enclosed piazza, local artisans spread out heaps of rugs worked in brilliantly colored traditional Albanian designs, often incorporated a stylized two-headed eagle. Red is the predominant color, with splashes of green, yellow, purple and black. In addition, exquisite quilt covers of coarse wool embroidered in bold, primitive patterns are usually displayed.

The rugs, which local people use in their homes and also as prayer rugs in the mosques, come in all sizes. Bargaining is expected, with prices ranging from under $10 to several hundred dollars according to size and intricacy of pattern.

Prices End.Lower on NYSE

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange ended lower Thursday, weighed down by continuing caution over the economic outlook and a broad retreat in the transportation sector.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 6.75, to 1,791.62, and declining issues led advancers by a 7-5 margin among the 1,965 issues traded. Other indexes also retreated. The NYSE's composite index lost 0.42 to 137.25 and the American Stock Exchange market value index was down 1.21, to 265.99. Volume totaled 134.71 million shares, down from 133.27 million in the previous session. Dealers said that rail stocks led the broad decline after the Interstate Commerce Commission rejected Santa Fe Southern's plan to merge its two railroads, the Santa Fe and Southern Santa Fe Southern led the actives, down 24, to 28.

The merger — or the nonmerger, as the case may be --- was the major factor in the decline,' said Charles Comer of Oppenheimer & Co..

But, he said, "The weakness of the transports today was specifically related to the Santa Fe Southern situation. If the weakness had been seen also in the airlines and the rest of the transports, it might have signaled something about the economy.

Airlines were fractionally mixed, with Delta up % to 40%, despite an 82-percent slide in earnings. But railroads fell alongside Santa Fe back from the 140-point drop in the first two weeks of July was less than impressive. And some investors have been too quick to forget the dramatic slide, he said. "The repair work is not in any way complet

Panhandle Eastern slumped 2, to 394. The company early in the day announced a big charge against earnings, and said it was consid-ering a recapitalization and spinoff of a unit. moves were viewed partly as defenses against a takeover bid by star partners.

The Panhandle charge, totaling $526 million. came after Hughes Tool announced a charge of more than $500 million. Drilling and natural eas stocks were sharply lower at first, but ended the day mixed. Hughes recovered 14 to 714, while Schlumberger declined 1/2 to 29%, after trading (Reuters, AP)

Bank Leu Branch is Realigned

Unit Implicated In Levine Case

By Peter Conradi

Reuters
ZURICH — Bank Leu AG of Switzerland said Thursday that it had replaced the management and board of its Bahamas subsidiary, which was implicated in the U.S. insider-trading case involving a former Wall Street merger specialist, Dennis B. Levine.

In a brief statement, Bank Leu said that officers of the Nassan-based subsidiary, Bank Len Inter-national Ltd., had been working "in disregard of instructions" from Bank Leu also denied that it had broken Swiss banking-secrecy laws by cooperating with U.S. authorities investigating the case.

Hans Knopfli, chairman of Bank Leu's management board, said that the subsidiary's five-member board had been dissolved and that he had stepped down as chairman of the subsidiary board. He said that he would remain in his post at the

Mr. Knopfii said that the shake up was an attempt to make a fresh start after the Levine affair, one of the largest U.S. cases involving alleged trading in shares based on privileged information.

Japan's Egg King Reigns in U.S.

Acquisitions, Marketing Spell Success for Ise

By Kathleen Teltsch

New York Times Service

LAKEWOOD, New Jersey —

Hikonobu Ise is known in his homeland of Japan as the egg king and he has a rightful claim to the title in the United States as

With 14 million chickens laywith 14 minon checkets ay-ing eggs for 100 markets east of the Mississippi River, Ise Ameri-ca already is, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, U.S. Department of Agriculture, the largest egg producer in the United States. Now Mr. Ise's company is determined to grow even larger with the help of an aggressive acquisition program and the introduction within a few weeks of its own brand name on a new transparent enterest.

few weeks of its own brand name on a new transparent egg carton. The see-through cellophane carton — slated to appear soon in supermarkets in New Jersey and New York — is aimed at eliminating complaints from customers that eggs they take home often are cracked, leaking and glued to the box.

The cartons, which for the first time will bear the imprint of Ise Farms and a new slogan, "the Honest Egg," could well be the forerunner of a strategy to make Ise a household name.

Most eggs in the United States

Most eggs in the United States are marketed under supermarket chain labels or through local brand names. Ise America, for instance, packages its eggs under the names of its supermarket customers as well as those of its subsidiaries.

If Ise America is to grow, however, it will have to do so through its own devices. Consumer health concerns have put a decided dent in the egg market as per-capita consumption in the Unit-ed States has fallen since 1980. Mr. Ise responds to fears that eggs contribute to an unhealthy th cholesterol level with a dis-danful shrug of an impeccably tailored shoulder.

"I eat at least four eggs every day, I like them fried or in omelets and my cholesterol level is fine," said the 55-year-old executive during one of his frequent trips to Lakewood to visit Seaboard Foods, a subsidiary of Ise

Harvey L Billiar/The New York Times Hikonobu Ise, head of Ise America egg producers.

Mr. Ise speaks no English and leans for translation on Kikuo Urayama, his son-in-law, a graduate of the Indiana Institute of Technology and vice president of Ise America.

Although convinced that a high-egg diet poses no health hazard, Mr. Ise nonetheless sup-ports research into the possibility of producing an egg with a lowered fat content by changing the diet of the chicken. The research in Japan and in the United States has not led to a breakthrough, and he expects that real progress is at least two years off. Meanwhile, Ise America is counting on superior quality to induce U.S. consumers to pay a slightly higher price. Mr.

Urayama said that Ise products were better because the company used its own feed and rushed eggs to market.

The eggs laid this morning are packed this afternoon and you can buy them tomorrow," he said. Ise America has I,000 employ-ees, almost all Americans. Only five members of the headquarters staff of 45 here are Japanese. And the company car is a Buick.

Immediately inside the en-tranceway at the company's complex in Lakewood is a large painting of two hens eyeing each other. It clearly bears no relation to the famed Ise art collection in Japan of renowned French Im-pressionists. Mr. Ise established the collection in a handsomely converted hatchery at his birth-place, Fukuotokatown, in west-

A warehouse complex is being built in northern New Jersey. Other holdings are in Virginia, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Indiana, Maryland and in Ohio, where its largest hatcheries, feed mills and egg processing plant are located. Ise America also is scouting the California market for an acquisition that would

ICC Bars Merger Of Santa Fe and Southern Pacific

H. Josef Hebert
The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The Interstate Commerce Commission, rejecting its staff's recommendation, voted 4-1 Thursday to block the proposed merger of the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific railroads into and Southern Pacific railroads into what would have been the third-largest U.S. rail system.

The proposal, which has been before the ICC for more than two and a half years, had been strongly criticized by competing railroads and the Justice Department.

The decision stunned executives

The decision stumned executives of Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corp., the holding company formed in December 1983 as part of the merger plan, which was then valued at $5.2 billion. The company must now divest itself of one of the railroads or come up with a plan that roads or come up with a plan that could pass ICC scrutiny.

John J. Schmidt, chairman of the holding company, called the decision "a horrible mistake," adding, "We're going to have to sell something off." But he said "this is not doomsday" and insisted that both rail lines can survive by cutting in May, however, Mr. Schmidt and other holding company execu-tives told the ICC that both railroads might be forced into bank-ruptcy if the merger were not approved.

The decision also surprised rail industry experts. The ICC last remarks in the jected a major rail merger in the late 1960s.

While the commission said Thursday that combining the rail-roads might be in the public inter-est, it said the "substantial adverse effect" on competition in some parts of the country outweighed any benefits. The ICC staff estimated that the merger could save shippers $200 million a year because of increased efficiency. Since 1983, all Southern Pacific

Donald Shaw, the ICC's acting director of the rail section, said the staff had concluded that any comstail had concluded that any com-petition problems could be solved by requiring railroads to be given track rights or other arrangements. But the ICC members, with the exception of the chairman, Heather Gradison, did not agree.

Ford Profit Tops $1 Billion in Ouarter, a First

The Associated Press
DETROIT — Ford Motor
Co., the No. 2 U.S. automaker, said Thursday that its second-quarter net was $1.08 billion, up 54 percent from $699 million in the 1985 period. It was Ford's first billion-dollar quarter.

Per-share profit came to $4.02, up from $2.50 a year earlier. Revenue rose more than 25 percent, to $17.3 billion from $13.8 billion.

The showing contrasts with those of No. 1 General Motors Corp., which reported a 16-percent drop in second-quarter profit, and Chrysler Corp., whose net fell 18 percent.

Like them, Ford cited the costs of retooling factories for new vehicles and expensive sales-incentive campaigns. But Ford said it had record income from foreign operations, up 44 percent from a year earlier to $286 million. Foreign earnings were 25 percent of net income. Ford's first-half net rose 20 percent to $1.8 billion, from $1.5 billion in the 1985 period. Revenue rose 18.5 percent to $32 billion from $27 billion.

German Group Sees Dollar Falling to 2 DM

By Warren Getler

tional Herald Tribune FRANKFURT — The value of the U.S. dollar will drop to 2 Dentsche marks in coming months, from current levels of around 2.12 DM, setting the stage for a major currency realignment in the European Monetary System before year's end, predicted the president of West Germany's leading eco-

Economic Research Institute in Munich, said Thursday that an IFO report to be released next week assumes that West German industry "will need to set its investment plans at a rate of 2 DM for the time being."

Mexico Seeking $6-Billion Loan

Washington Post Service NEW YORK — Mexico's finance minister, Gustavo Petri-cioli, has told leading commercial banks that his nation needs $12 billion in new loans to get through 1987, and asked them to supply half of it.

The money will help Mexico avoid a deepening of its current recession and "allow us to resume moderate but sustained growth in 1987," he told a meet-ing of bankers here Wednesday night. The group already holds 80 percent of Mexico's $97.6-billion debt, the second largest in the developing world.

Mr. Petricioli, who took over as finance minister last month, suggested to the banks that lowering interest rates might be an "intelligent recognition of the fact that the debtor needs real relief in order to service its debt

Mr. Oppenländer's analysis — coming a day after the U.S. Federal Reserve chairman, Paul A. Volcker, Karl Heinrich Oppenländer, Reserve chairman, Paul A. In testimony before the Senate banking committee Wednesday, Mr. Volcker underscored the dangers of using discount-rate reduc-tions to manipulate the dollar's exchange rate. However, he added that the Fed was prepared to uni-laterally trim its discount rate if it were viewed as an "appropriate" way to right the domestic economy. "Volcker's comments seem to have cooled-off expectations of a U.S. rate cut," Mr. Hornig said Norbert Walter, senior econo-mist at the Kiel Institute for World Economy, said that the failure of Bonn and Tokyo to follow the Fed's lead in catting rates — and thus narrow the interest-rate differ-ential that attracts foreign capital — will result in a famy rapid appreciation of the mark and the year against the dollar.

Both the Bundesbank and the Bank of Tokyo declined to cut their rates after the Fed had trimmed its discount rate a half point, to 6 percent, earlier this month.

6 27% 27% Kodak Appeals Patent Case ROCHESTER, New York — Eastman Kodak Co. said Thursday that it has asked the U.S. Supreme Court to hear its appeal in the multimillion-dollar Polaroid Corp. patent-infringement case that forced it out of the instant photography business.

Kodak may be forced to pay Polaroid damages of almost $1 billion if it fails to win the decade-old case on appeal. Kodak said it will not re-enter the instant photography market.

Pepsico Agrees to Purchase Kentucky Fried Chicken

NEW YORK -- Pepsico Inc. announced Thursday that it had reached an agreement in principle to purchase Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. from RJR Nabisco Inc. for about $850 million in cash. Kentucky Fried Chicken is the second-largest restaurant chain in the world — after McDonald's Corp. — with 6,500 franchised and strettett berver-vnermos Pepsico operates Pizza Hut and Taco Bell restaurants, in addition to its Pepsi-Cola soft drink and Frito-Lay snack foods businesses.

The combination would create the world's largest restaurant group. with more than 14,000 restaurants.

Pepsico, the No. 2 soft-drink maker behind Coca-Cola Co., earlier this month announced that it had acquired the international opera-tions of Seven-Up Co. from Philip Morris Cos. for $246 million in cash. That announcement came after the U.S. Federal Trade Commis sion objected on antitrust grounds to Pepsico's earlier arrangement to acquire the domestic and international divisions of Seven-Up.

The Kentucky Fried Chicken accord is subject to the negotiation of a definitive agreement, review by government agencies and final approval by the boards of both companies, Pepsico said.

RJR Nabisco, which is based in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. ilso has gotten out of the carbonated soft drink business. It completed the $230-million sale of its Canada Dry and Sunkist operations to Cadbury Schweppes PLC on Thursday. Outside North America, Kentucky Fried Chicken is the largest restaurant chain, with 1,800 restaurants operating in 56 countries.

Venezuela's 'Informal' Economy

Sharp Rise in Official Jobless Rate Fuels a New Trend

- CARACAS — In early 1980, Argenis Velasquez quit working behind the counter of a street cafe in hopes of landing a higher-paying job. But several months later, unable to find anything, he left the mainstream economy to begin re-pairing shoes on a busy downtown

"When I started out, there weren't too many zapateros," said Mr. Velasquez, 28, who is married and a father of four. "Now there are a lot of people repairing shoes. It's not the best job in the world, but it provides enough for me and my family." Mr. Velasquez symbolizes two major trends in Venezuela, where, with the steady drop in oil prices, the economy is expected to decline in 1986 for the eighth straight year. One development is the growth in the informal, or underground, economy following a sharp increase in the official unemployment rate. The other trend is a change in consumer buying habits change in constitue to the purchasing power since 1979.

Both of these trends have been occurring in most other Latin American countries, which also have been wracked by years of eco-

Oil income accounts for 90 percent of export earnings, 60 percent of government revenue and 25 percent of gross national product, which measures the total value of Venezuela's goods and services, in-

Analysts thought that the economy would register positive growth this year, but because of the crash in oil prices, they now are forecast-

With the unemployment rate at 13 percent, workers like Mr. Velasquez have been unable to find jobs in traditional occupations and have oined the informal economy, dong everything from peddling fruit from shopping carts in downtown Caracas to selling lottery tickets at bus stations

The growth in the informal economy has softened the political and social impact of Venezuela's downturn. "With unemployment rising and with no effective welfare net for Venezuela's marginal popula-tion, street peddling provides a socially tolerable alternative to begging, robbery or starvation," one analyst wrote recently.

Crime has risen, however, as has the number of beggars. Edmond Saade, president of a

Instead of buying a new car when their current vehicle develops an engine knock or a door gets dented. Venezuelans now ignore the problem or have it repaired. "There has been a big increase in business for mechanics." Mr. Strange said.

Similarly, instead of buying new shoes when the current pair gets worn. Venezuelans have them repaired by men like Mr. Velasquez.

Mr. Saade said he believes that the changes in consumer spending will have long-lasting effects. "Austerity has lasted five or six years already and will continue for at least two more years," he said. "Even when Venezuelans have more money, this period will have lasted so long it will have left its mark for years to come."

no figures, no speeches, no noth-ing, said one trader. This contrast-ed with Wednesday's volatile swings in response to comments by the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Paul A. Volcker. In congressional testimony, Mr. Volcker said that, "History demonstrates all too clearly that a kind of self-reinforcing cascading depreci-ation of a currency is not in the nation's interest or that of its trading partners."

Economists said Mr. Volcker's main message seemed to be that the Fed has done all it can for now to boost the U.S. economy, and that the solution lies not in still lower domestic interest rates but in quicker foreign growth

The dollar reacted little to comments on Thursday by the U.S. commerce secretary, Malcolm Baldrige, in which he disagreed with Mr. Volcker's warning.

In other European markets, meanwhile, the dollar was fixed at midafternoon in Frankfurt at 2.1301 DM, up from 2.1263 at the Wednesday fixing, and at 6.8790 French francs in Paris, nearly unchanged from 6.8693. It closed in Zurich at 1.7205 Swiss francs, down from 1.7320. (Reuters, IHT)

M-1 Declines By $1 Billion

NEW YORK — The narrow-est measure of U.S. money sup-ply — the M-1 — fell $1 billion to a seasonally adjusted $673.1 billion in the week that ended July 14, the Federal Reserve said Thursday.

The previous week's M-1 level was revised upward to $674.1 billion, from $673.9 billion, while the four-week moving average rose to $670.0 billion from $668.8 billion. The M-1 measure includes currency in circulation, traveler's checks and checking deposits at financial institutions

The average forecast of economists surveyed was for a $1-billion decline. Their predictions ranged from unchanged to a $2-billion fall.

MARCEL ALLAIN and Pierre Souvestre began chronicling the misdeeds of Fan-tomas in 1911. On the basis of a journalistic squib that they had dashed off, a French publisher commissioned them to write a series of five fantastic novels on a common theme; they settled on the idea of making their central character an elusive master-criminal, and enjoyed such an enormous success that the series eventually ran to 32 volumes (11 of them written by Allain on his own after Souvestre's death in 1914). Within a year or two, the first of numerous Fantomas movies were being made;

the books were also frequently reprinted, and soon began to attract the literati — some of them, at least. As early as 1912, Guillaume

Apollinaire organized an avant-garde fan club,

Les Amis de Fantomas, and in his excellent introduction to a new edition of the first Fan-tomas story (an updated version of the original 1915 translation), the poet John Ashbery recalls some of the praise lavished on the series

by the Surrealists in particular but by such figures as Jean Coctean ("absurd and magnificent lyricism") and Blaise Cendrars ("the mod-ern Aeneid"). Max Jacob and Robert Desnos

both wrote Fantomas poems, Desnos's being set to music by Kurt Weill; Juan Gris painted a characters are gathered together in a château; in the middle of the night one of them is mysteriously murdered; in no time at all we are olunged into a whiripool of suspicious, confessions, abrupt disappearances, miscellaneous mayhem, amazing resuscitations.

It would be hopeless to try to summarize the plot, and pointless to protest at its implausibilities and loose ends. For much of its length it gives the impression of having been completely improvised; almost the only things that bind it together are the obsessions of Inspector Juve of Boyd, on a pass from the Boston medical center where he is undergoing tests after a run-in with police last week, was arrested for an unpaid motor vehicle violation after his wife was stopped for speeding Wednesday night. State Police said a routine computer check revealed that Boyd had an outstanding specing violation from "a few years back." Boyd, at 11-6, is Boston's second-winningest pitcher.

Walker Misses the Commonwealth Games Spirit

By Bert Rosenthal

The Associated Press EDINBURGH - New Zealander John Walker, the 1976 Olympic gold medalist at 1,500 meters, said Thursday he was dismayed at the lack of spirit and enthusiasm for the 13th Commonwealth Games.

"You'd never think this was the Commonwealth Games," the veteran said shortly before the games' opening ceremony. "It's certainly not like the Olympics, or even other Common-wealth Games I've been to.

"The fact is that you can still get tickets for the opening ceremony. . . And they're still put-ting the scaffolding on the stadium. "I remember at the last Olympics [in Los Angeles in 1984], the athletes were having a good time in the village. They were swapping pins and exchanging bunners and doing a lot of tun things. Here there's no atmosphere. It's having "

Walker, who has moved out of the village with his wife and two children but still spends some time there, had noted on Wednesday that there was one television set for 127 peo-

YOU GET TO PLAY IT WHEN YOU CAN SPELLIT ...

Walker said he agreed with the assessment of publisher Robert Maxwell, the event's chairman, that the games "were not being run by professionals." Maxwell rescued the games by raising roughly £3 million (about $4.5 million). "I think Maxwell summed it up perfectly, Walker said. "Too many amateurs have been involved. The games can't be left to amateurs."

Even the contestants are to blame, Walker said. "Athletes are trying to swap events in an effort to try and win medals." "It's really come down to a four-country cet," he said, referring to England, Canada, New Zealand and Australia

Yet even Walker, who will run the 5,000 meters against a field including England's Sieve Ovett, the 1980 Olympic 800-meter gold medalist, had thought about doubling — adding the 10,000 to his schedule. But he scratched the Much of the excitement and looseness at the village has been diminished by the absence of athletes owing to boycotts by 32 nations.

"If those athletes were here," Walker said, "I might have done it," said Walker, a relative newcomer to the 5,000 and a novice in the 10,000.

Now in the twilight of a brilliant career, Walker would like nothing more than to win a gold — even if the field has been watered down by the withdrawals of many top African long-dictance number of the state of th tance runners.

"I feel sorry for the athletes who aren't here. Boycotts don't prove anything. Too many negative things have been said about these games. I shink they have to start talking positively."

der: I hate to cook out. The reason I hate to cook out is that every time I try it everybody looks at me in disbelief and disgust and somebody always says, "You can't cook out as well as my 7-year-

son. Never a 7-year-old daughter. Know why? Because cooking out is supposed to be a macho thing to do, like playing in the Sunday soft-ball game, which I also hate, and getting together with all the guys and several cases of beer to watch the Super Bowl, which I hate even worse than cooking out.

Who defines what is and isn't macho, anyhow? I am terrific at doing jigsaw puzzles, but the instant I start boasting about the big 2,000-piece job I whipped in just three days, other men fall silent, then change the subject to giant marlin they battled in the Gulf Stream, to great beers they drank while watching Super Bowls, to whole sides of beef they cooked out for parties of 150.

Honestly now, can anybody explain why smoking up the neigh-borhood with flaming beef grease is any more macho than putting together a jigsaw puzzle?

Afterward I realized that was why I enjoyed living in Manhattan all those years before the real-estate goons drove me out. In Manhattan, nobody expected you to cook out.

After those sweet New York years, I'd forgotten about the macho ritual of cooking out until, ensconced in my new rustic paradise, I found myself buying a grill, a bag it is. If only there were some way to of charcoal, a can of fluid for making the charcoal burn and a doomed sirioin. It was madness, of course, but there was no way out.

I had lived three months in this new place without once cooking out. Suspicion was growing. This was a neighborhood where men cooked out three times a week. It was apparently an obligation of spatula, I get the steak off the coals good citizenship, like doing jury duty.

So I have confronted my manly duty. Just as in the incompetent old cookout days, before the glorious Manhattan years, the charcoal still refuses to burn and people dear to me still come outside with questions. "How soon will the steak be

Observations: "You've been out here over an hour and haven't even got the charcoal lit."

Exhortations to grow up: "Don't be childish - of course the charcoal isn't trying to humiliate you." And swinish declarations of sexist dogma: "No I will not take over Notice it's always a 7-year-old and cook the steak for you. Cooking out is men's work."

By the time the coals tire of having sport with me, the sun is long gone. In dark of night the meat to be cooked out is placed on the grill, and one of two things happens:

1) Flames six feet high envelop the meat, and dense smoke from the inferno pours through the house. To prevent the meat from becoming cinder, I hard a bucket of water on the blaze. The roar of steam brings back romantic memories of great hissing locomotives in beautiful railroad stations, and I find myself thinking of Anna Kar-enina. And then of her lover, Count Vronsky. As macho as they come was Count Vronsky, and Count Vronsky didn't have to stand around immersed in reeking grease fumes and steam in order to charm Anna, did he?

2) Or, no flame whatever occurs. The coals have glanced up, inspected this steak and judged it too boring to cook. They lie there sulking. The steak lies dumbly on the grill.

"Isn't the thing done yet?" How often did I hear that despairing cry before the marvelous New York vears. And now I must hear it

How do I know if it's done? It's too dark by now even to see where get it off the grill. But of course the long fork designed for that purpose was thrown away years ago during a fit of pique after I'd inadvertently plunged it into my thigh while falling over the empty water bucket I'd forgotten to put out of the way after making the steam. Using an asbestos shingle as a and into the kitchen light for inspection. Groans of despair all around. But none from me. I am too preoccupied inventing excuses for not getting together with all the guys and several cases of beer next winter to watch the Super Bowl.

about thinking style," the French interior designer Andrée Putman was saying, sitting stylishly in the Putman-designed breakfast room of Morgans Hotel, super-stylishly smoking a white cigarette that matched the stylish white paint on her lingernaīls.

"Style has nothing to do with money," she said. "In fact, an excess of money can handicap style. It doesn't help to have so much choice. It creates amazing anxiety."

Putman is a woman who could bottle style. Until she does, she is spending her time as an internationally known interior designer. During her recent stay at Morgans, for instance, stylish little black and gray message envelopes would mysteriously appear under her hotel room door. Contained therein? "Proposals for work," she says, her deep voice the stuff thrillers are made of.

"I am amazed. I am also frightened. I am at a moment of success that is almost dangerous." Too much success, as with too much money, it appears, can create amazing anxiety.

Putmen is at an interesting juncture right now. Eight years ago, she founded Ecart International, a company based in France that reproduces the furnishings of Eileen Gray, Mariano Fortuny and other classic 20thcentury designers. At the same time, armed with her distinctive black, white and gray palette and such clients as the designers Yves Saint Laurent, Karl Lagerfeld and Azzedine Alaia, she jet-propelled to fame, becoming taste maker to the French avant-garde through elegant spare interiors that she called "sweet and clean

The quintessence of "le style Putman," the loft is a contemporary, understated interior filled with fine art, favorite 1930s objects and a few intentional quirks, including clothes hanging on a coat rack as part of many magazine features on "le style Putman" later, Putman herself has become something of a TEW YORK — "To me, it's design object. In Paris, she is a fixture. "Andrée can have dinner with Michael of Greece, attend a performance by Alan Suicide and then dance the rest of the night away at Chib 7," said the Paris magazine Passion. "But every morning at 9 o'clock sharp she is in her office with a pencil in one hand and a ruler in the other."

"Are you Andrée Putman?" people ask in New York, where she spends three to four months 2 year. Stamesque, teetering on the brink between beautiful and bizarre, she is hard to miss in a crowd, dressed in her signature black and white that shows off an ever-present, stainless-steel Art Deco necklace (that was salvaged from a sidewalk). She can seem larger than life, particularly when uttering phrases over croissants such as this: "I enjoy food like few do. But my work makes me so high that sometimes I forget to eat."

Her work includes interiors for the new women's store at Barneys New York, scheduled to open later this summer, model apart-ments for United Nations Plaza and Metropolitan Tower, seven bathrooms for the Michigan residence of Alfred A. Taubman. president of Sotheby's; hotels in Toronto and Paris, and interiors for an art museum in Rouen.

In France, there are Putmandesigned plates, stationery, fabrics, sheets, rugs and tiles, and in the United States, Putman-designed furniture and jewelry are lanned. "The exposure creates a lot of possibilities," she says. "It also puts a very lonely but exciting pressure on my life."

The architect Richard Meier, a fellow modernist, calls her great designer." "She relates well to the modern movement," he says. "There's no corporate image — that's what's so interesting about her." Like a handful of her colleagues. Putman is in the enviable but peculiar position of deciding how popular she wants to be. "There is a terrifying aspect in massive sales," she says. "It absolutely fascinates me, but I am very cautious. For me, the real thing is Andrée Putman, the designer, in the living room of her model apartment in New York.

She has recently begun to think about the flip side of her popularity. "I began to see almost as if I had a magnifying glass how one could be slightly destroyed by a mass-produced image. It was like diving in ice water. It really woke Designing apartments only for the wealthy, however, does not interest her either. The ego wars!" she says, sighing. "I prefer stingy people who say, 'No, it's too expensive,'" to people who just give me the key and say, We want to be "in." '

She could happily spend the rest of her career, she says, designing public space and objects. When I see students in the streets carrying my notebooks, I really enjoy it," she says. "I love to be involved in a program that is completely unpretentious." Her lack of pretention does have its limits. "I would never," she says politely, "do polyester mid-1970s, she was artistic director for Createurs et Industrie, a group that started Issey Miyake, among others.

Her personal shift from fashion to interiors, she says, mirrors a broader one. "I don't think fashion interests anyone anymore, she says. "You can no longer tell a woman, This season you're going to wear golf trousers. People know so much more who they are and what they want."

By contrast, she says, interiors have become more important. Before, interiors were highly decorated, or brilliantly beautiful or very shabby," she says, "but they were not full of secret messages. Now, the environment invades people's lives. People look at it, criticize it."

Not that contemporary interiors are taking over. Visiting the Kips Bay show house last year, for instance, Putman felt overwhelmed by Victoriana, "I could not believe that not one individual would be invited to tell the world, 'We are in 1986,'" says. "I was in shock!"

Putman comes by her own avant-garde credentials honestly. Raised on Paris's Left Bank, she describes her parents as "eccentric black sheep of very conserva-

Her mother, a pianist, played Schumann in the nursery to her children; her father was a transiator of Shakespearean plays. She spent childhood summers at the Abbaye de Fontenay, a 12th-centrary abbey owned by her family in Burgundy. Later, in Par-is, having decided not to pursue a career in music, she got a job as a design editor for the French art magazine L'Oeil.

Interior design came late, spurred by the breakup of her marriage. "I had to move and live alone and take care of my two children," she says. "I had no job. I was really very lost. I had the feeling I would never succeed, be-cause I felt I would only interest 10 people in my work."
